Books

Breaking the Silence

One of the most recent of the national Deaf histories to emerge, this look into Deaf education in Ireland manages to be at once astonishing and low key. The author Edward Crean gives his tale extensive context, somewhat bemusingly beginning with the "American experience," then discussing efforts to educate deaf and hard of hearing children in France, Britain, and Germany. Throughout he explores Deaf education through the oral and signing philosophies, what the 19th century called "The Methods War" which still exists today...

Paperback €38.50

The Avenue: A History of The Claremont Institution

The book, written by Rachel Pollard, contains personal memoirs and a range of contemporary illustrations, documents the history of the Claremont Institution (1816-1978), managed by the Church of Ireland. Detailed are the social conditions experienced within and outside the school and personal accounts of some pupils as well as description of daily life in the 19th century.

Paperback €12.00

Signing In and Signing Out

The education and employment experiences of Deaf adults in Ireland, A Study of Inequality and Deaf People in Ireland.
